Preface

Studying the admiralty field—the field of marine casualties and transactions—necessitates inquiry into issues ranging across much of the basic law school curriculum, including civil procedure, comparative law, conflicts of laws, constitutional law, contracts, creditors’ rights, environmental law, federal courts, insurance, international law, legislation, products liability, property, remedies, torts, and workers’ compensation.

We do not claim that our book provides the opportunity to teach all of these subjects. But we have tried to select cases with an eye to maximizing the admiralty course’s potential for integrating the knowledge the students will have gained from their other courses. In Section I-F’s Thornsteinsson opinion, for example, U.S. law’s commitment to the requirement of physical arrest of the vessel in in rem proceedings as an essential element of due process came into sharp conflict with our country’s strong regard for the necessity and wisdom of recognizing the judgments of other countries’ courts. For another example, see United Rope in Section I-G-10, a cargo-damage case in which Judge Easterbrook provides a keenly analytical look into the murkiest part of the pervasive issue of personal jurisdiction. A third good example of what we think of as cross-cutting cases is Section II-A’s Brotherhood opinion, in which Judge Posner gives a lucid demonstration of the usefulness of the Learned Hand negligence formula (the B&P inquiry) in the context of a widely-publicized accident in Milwaukee’s harbor. For a final example, see Kotch in Section V-B. The Supreme Court here presents a colorful picture of the life of lower Mississippi River pilots in the course of a demonstration that state-supported nepotism does not necessarily violate the equal protection clause.

In editing the cases and supplementing them with textual material, we have used the following signals: Omitted text is signaled by three asterisks. (An ellipsis thus indicates the courts’ omissions in the original opinion.) Inserted text is enclosed in brackets. Omitted citations are signaled by empty brackets. Our own editorial footnotes to the opinions are signaled by putting the footnote number in brackets. (Otherwise, footnote numbers in opinions are the courts’ original numbers.) Cross-references within the book refer to the chapter number, the section number, and the sub-section (if any). Thus “Section II-A” means chapter II, section A, and “Section I-G-10” means chapter I, section G, sub-section 10.

Because this is a teaching book and not a case reporter, we have made some changes to the opinions without providing any signal. These include minor changes to the courts’ punctuation and typography, correction of obvious spelling errors, and correction of citations and citation form. Unsignaled omissions include the courts’ citations to the record, citations to the opinions below, and the courts’ footnotes. Occasionally, we found that our editing of an opinion required moving one of the court’s footnotes. When we did that, we left the footnote number intact but did not signal the change of position.
